

SIMPLE DANCING FROCKS RULE IN SUMMER

Everybody dances these days—dance days as well as nights. At lawn parties as well as balls, and at teas as well as dinners dancing is sure to enliven the entertainment.

So the dancing frock is just as necessary a part of the summer wardrobe as it is of the winter outfit and the summer girl gives just as much attention to her dancing dresses as to her outing clothes.

The frock illustrated is made of white charmeuse, but it would be just as pretty if white mull or Paris lawn were substituted for the more expensive material. The underskirt is short, and it's wide enough to allow for the glides and slides of the new dances. The tunic is very simple and the bodice is simply draped around the figure, giving the effect of a sash. If made for day wear, short sleeves and a round neck would be more appropriate than the sleeveless, low-necked gown pictured.
